- Medication assisted treatment services to combat the fentanyl epidemic
- Expanded, culturally appropriate mental health treatment and support
- Services (including on-site childcare) specifically tailored to support opioid-using pregnant and post-partum women
- How behavioral health services can decrease homelessness and criminal behavior and improve the overall health of the community

Fentanyl is bringing a new, dangerous dimension to the ongoing opioid epidemic. More and more people are suffering from chronic homelessness. Property and violent crime is on the rise. Quality, evidence-based substance use and mental health treatment and support is one of the best strategies to combat these public and community health challenges. There are many people seeking behavioral healthcare in South King County and there are not enough providers to meet the demand. THS is growing to meet the needs of the community.

Throughout its more than 50-year history, THS has been providing quality behavioral healthcare to some of the most vulnerable members of Puget Sound communities. Therapeutic Health Services opened its Kent location in 2010.
