AN ORDINANCE relating to personnel policies; clarifying when a probationary period is applied to employees and establishing a discretionary trial service period for laterally transferred employees; and amending Ordinance 12014, Section 5, as amended and K.C.C. 3.12.010, and Ordinance 12014, Section 13, as amended and K.C.C. 3.12.100.

BE IT ORDAINED BY THE COUNCIL OF KING COUNTY:

SECTION 1. Findings:

A. A career service employee is appointed to a county position as a result of a competitive selection process and that appointment is final upon the successful completion of a probationary period. The probationary period is used to determine the probationary employee's qualification for entry into career service.

Achieving career service is analogous to achieving tenure. Until successful completion of the probationary period, the employee is "at-will" and may be terminated without cause.

B. A career service employee has a constitutionally-protected property right in his or her career service position that cannot be removed or reduced absent due process. In this context, that means that the employee must be given notice and an opportunity to be heard prior to suspension, demotion, or termination of employment. Entry into career service in King County also carries with it other rights, such as referral to other positions upon layoff and reemployment opportunities for up to two years after separation from employment.

C. The probationary period has been applied in the county to employees upon initial employment, reemployment, promotion, demotion, and lateral transfer to career service positions. However, there are two situations in which the probationary period should not be applied because the employee is currently in career service status, has already competed in a selection process, and an additional competitive selection process is not necessary. This occurs when an employee is promoted under a reclassification process or when an employee is laterally transferred to a position in the same classification and/or the same pay range.

D. Under K.C.C. 3.12.100, a probationary period is required for an employee who is promoted to a career service position. However, the King County Code does not make a distinction between an employee who is promoted under a competitive process and an employee who is promoted under a reclassification process. An employee who is promoted under a competitive selection process should serve a probationary period. An employee who is promoted under a reclassification process should not.

A reclassification in the county simply recognizes that the employee has been performing the duties of a higher classification and should, therefore, be promoted to that classification. Local public jurisdictions vary on whether or not a probationary period should be required for an employee promoted under a reclassification process.

Under K.C.C. 3.15.030, the director of the human resources division may reclassify an employee's current position and, if the reclassification results in a promotion, assign a pay increase to the employee. A reclassification may result in a promotion when there has been a gradual accretion and significant change in the duties and responsibilities of a career service employee over a period of one year. The employee already competed for his or her underlying position, thus, the employee's qualification for entry into career service had already been met. Imposing an additional probationary period on such a career service employee offers no benefit to the county and means that the employee involuntarily loses the protections of career service status.

E. Under K.C.C. 3.12.100, a probationary period is currently required for a career service employee who transfers to another position. This means that an employee who moves from one work unit to another, without any change in pay or classification, loses the protections of his or her career service status. Because the employee who transfers has already served a probationary period in the same classification and/or the same pay range, the employee's qualification for entry into career service has already been met. Therefore, a probationary period for a laterally transferred employee should not be required.

Other local public jurisdictions vary on whether a probationary period is required for an employee who laterally transfers. Some impose a trial service period as an alternative.

While a probationary period for a laterally transferred employee should not be required, a discretionary trial service period is prudent. When transferring to a new position in the same classification and/or same pay range, the duties and responsibilities may be similar but not identical. Therefore, an opportunity to evaluate the suitability of the employee to the new position may be appropriate. A trial service period accomplishes that goal without putting the employee at risk of losing his or her career service status. Should the hiring authority determine that the employee is not suited to the new position, the employee may be restored to the former position under some circumstances or afforded post-separation assistance to attempt to match the employee with another County position, as determined by the human resources division manager.

F. A probationary period is currently required for a career service employee who demotes to another position. The imposition of a probationary period should be discretionary at the option of the hiring authority. When demoting to a new position in a lower pay range, an employee may or may not be well suited for position duties and responsibilities. Therefore, an opportunity to evaluate the qualifications of the employee to the new position may still be appropriate.

An optional probationary period accomplishes that goal. A probationary period may not be necessary depending upon the duties and responsibilities of the new position but the hiring authority may be reluctant to accept a demoted employee without a probationary option.

Currently, employees, including employees who are demoted, earn a step increase upon passing probation. However, a step increase upon successful completion of probation for a demoted employee is not warranted.
