AN ORDINANCE providing for the submission to the qualified electors of King County at a special election to be held in King County on November 7, 2006, of a proposition to provide regional health and human services to residents of King County by authorizing a property tax levy in excess of the levy limitation contained in chapter 84.55 RCW, at a rate of not more than $0.082 per one thousand dollars of assessed valuation, for the purpose of providing funding to enable the provision of health and human services such as housing, mental health counseling, substance abuse prevention and treatment, employment assistance and other essential regional health and human services for residents of King County and establishing a county regional human service board to review and report on expenditures of levy proceeds, contingent on voter approval of the levy.

BE IT ORDAINED BY THE COUNCIL OF KING COUNTY:

SECTION 1. Findings:

A. The metropolitan King County council by Ordinance 13629 in September 1999 adopted a framework of policies for human services and guidelines for implementing those policies. In September 2003, the metropolitan King County council by Motion 11820 adopted the report of the King County general government budget advisory task force, including that body's recommendation to develop long-term funding plans for human services and parks, clearly delineating regional and local roles. In August 2004, the task force on regional human services issued their final report entitled Stand Together: A Blueprint for Transforming Human Services in King County. That report noted that a new stable funding source, via ballot measure, is needed for human services.

B. The task force on regional human services report outlined five community goals that have been adopted by United Way, King County, Seattle, Bellevue and the South King County Human Services Forum.

The five goals are:

1. Food to eat and a roof overhead;
2. Supportive relationships within families, neighborhoods and communities;
3. Safe haven from all forms of violence and abuse;
4. Health care to be as physically and mentally fit as possible; and
5. Education and job skills to lead an independent life.

C. The task force on regional human services recommended that an interim body be convened to address the following next steps: recommend the amount of financing needed; recommend a new funding source, a ballot measure; and work with others to develop a strong public education plan. The King County executive in July 2005 formed the healthy families and communities task force to address the next steps identified by the task force on regional human services.

D. In 2004, King County was among only a handful of large areas across the nation where pay dropped and poverty rates jumped. A U.S. Census Bureau annual survey outlined a Seattle-area economy that was out of step with the nation last year where the poverty rate jumped from 7.3 percent of county residents living in poverty to 10.4 percent, with approximately 187,000 people living in poverty, and where median income dropped to $55,114 in 2004 from $56,881 the previous year.

E. The Puget Sound region has a growing homeless population, estimated to be as many as 8,000 on any given night. Many factors contribute to the problem of homelessness. Unemployment, chemical and substance abuse and mental illness are prominent among them. In addition to homelessness, thousands of citizens in King County are in need of services with regard to such conditions as mental illness, substance abuse, domestic violence, aging, developmental disabilities and repeated incarceration. While funding sources exist for many services that are mandated by the state, such as mental health services alcoholism/substance abuse and veterans services, King County has provided funding from local sources for discretionary services, such as homelessness and low income housing, employment assistance, after-school and tutoring services, child care and family support, maternal and pediatric health, teen parent training and support, services for domestic violence victims, treatment for sexually abused children, youth emergency shelters, early childhood and family support and community-based youth violence prevention programs.

F. Annexations and incorporations, economic recessions and unemployment, and tax limiting initiatives have contributed to a structural gap between the county's revenues and expenditures. The metropolitan King County council over the last several years has adopted a number of long-range policies that prioritize competing needs while addressing this structural gap. Over the past four years the council has cut over $100 million from the general fund in order to address this structural gap. The structural gap still exists and will continue to apply pressure on the county to find ways to pay for mandated and discretionary services. Funding for discretionary human services comes primarily from the county's general fund. A portion of the county's general property tax levy, under chapter 73.08 RCW, titled "Veterans' Relief," is devoted exclusively to services for veterans. However, this levy is insufficient in meeting the needs of veterans.

G. At the same time that funding for discretionary human services is in jeopardy, the population of veterans in the state is growing, along with the human service needs of this sector of the population. Approximately 180,900 veterans live in King County representing twenty-seven percent of the state's veterans and Washington ranks twelfth nationwide for the total number of veterans in the state.

H. According to the National Coalition for Homeless Veterans, despite statutory requirements and annual increases in the Veterans Health Administration budget each year, Veterans Health Administration spending on mental health and addiction services has declined by eight percent over the past seven years, and by twenty-five percent when adjusted for inflation.

I. The Veterans Health Administration reports that, since the start of war in Iraq in March 2003, more than 26,000 men and women in the military have applied for benefits nationwide. Fully a third of those claims have still not been processed.

J. The county's current expense fund faces continuing challenges in future years, including anticipated shortfalls in 2006 and 2007 in excess of $11 million each year. As a discretionary service under state law, human service funding is threatened with significant additional cuts if it remains reliant primarily on current expense funding.

K. With the continuing structural gap and anticipated budget shortfalls, implementation of the task force on regional human services' recommendation to find a new funding source for human services for all King County residents, including veterans, has become a necessity.
